Un giorno raccogliero le mie piume e volero via

VETRINA

For some years now, I have been obsessively drawing feathers
Feathers that I make rise up from the blankness of the paper, drawing with graphite everything that surrounds them: the feather remains, the soul of the paper.
The feathers feed on the air, defying gravity
Just as my life feeds on love and visions that defy death.
Daily practice has led me from drawing single feathers to creating dozens of them.
Successively I sought walls, places, glances to house and collect them.
A journey has begun, every wall is sacred the moment in which it gathers art.
Every wall has reinstated my idea that everything can have wings to fly away.
To be everywhere so as not to be enclosed anywhere.
As free as a feather.
